16. Fattakhova K. A. The right of a student to draft deferment during vacation period after final state examination

Abstract. In the article author comes to the conclusion that at first sight neither law nor jurisprudence has an unambiguous answer to the question: does a student have a right to deferment during vacation period after final state examination in Bachelor's, Specialist's and Master's programs (so-called «postgraduate vacation»)? Nowadays Russian call-up age students when finishing their university education may face a particular problem: while they are on postgraduate vacation they can be called into military service. Courts which answer negatively to foregoing question generally assume that there is no need for draft deferment, which was granted to students to get their education, to remain in effect, because after they pass final state examination and receive diploma of higher education, they should be considered to have exercised their right to education and consequently no longer have the right to draft deferment. But does this approach establish a balance between the duty to defend the homeland provided for in the Russian Constitution and constitutional right to education? The author scrutinizes this question and comes to the conclusion that there can be only a negative answer to it. But the answer does not appear on the surface. Furthermore, it seems that divergence of courts' opinions on the question concerning the right of a student to draft deferment during the period of his postgraduate vacations has some root causes. In the author's view, these causes may lie in the fact that while Federal Education Act, in general, does not cover issues concerning the duration of draft deferment, some of its provisions may have the effect of prolonging draft deferment period. In view of the foregoing, the author believes that there is a need to amend the legislation. In the article he formulates necessary amendments to Federal Military Duty and Service Act. Adoption of proposed amendments could not only encourage uniformity of future jurisprudence in the area under consideration but also ensure its predictability.
